

130,000-year-old baby woolly mammoth was found in ices of Canada

When miners in Canada discovered an animal frozen in permafrost, they quickly called in specialists. None of them were ready for what was discovered: Researchers at the University of Calgary were stunned when it turned out that this was a female baby of a woolly mammoth about 130 thousand years old with perfectly preserved nails on the legs, skin, torso and wool – the best preserved woolly mammoth ever found in North America.
