

China has invested $2.6 billion in the development of Tajikistan's economy over the past 10 years, with 57% of this amount being direct investments. This was stated by the First Deputy Chairman of the State Committee on Investments and State Property Management of Tajikistan, Farrukh Yusupzoda, according to Avesta.

The politician spoke on this topic during a summit with representatives of Chinese investment and industrial companies. According to him, the Tajik authorities are currently focused on improving the investment climate and simplifying administrative procedures.

Yusupzoda noted that thanks to the "Investment Law," foreign investors have legal guarantees, including the right to transfer income in foreign currency outside the country. He also highlighted that the republic pays special attention to the distribution of hydroelectric resources and the attraction of modern technologies to the country.
