

Huawei will release one of the most affordable foldable flip phones in March

He stated that this is a mobile phone running on the new version of HarmonyOS NEXT, which is not based on Android.

Although Chengdong did not specify which device he was referring to, many speculate that it could be the Huawei Pocket 3 — a foldable flip smartphone.

Pocket 2 was released in February 2024, making March an ideal time to announce its successor. This phone was relatively inexpensive for its class, aligning with the promise to make the product accessible.

Huawei claims that the new device will be “beyond imagination” and “create a buzz across the country.” We have to wait for the official announcement to find out what exactly the company is preparing.
