

It is still unclear how such an agreement would work and whether it complies with American laws, especially regarding freedom of speech and technology regulation. Legal experts question the feasibility of such deals, particularly considering potential fines for violating federal laws.

ByteDance, the parent company of TikTok in China, has received other offers, including reportedly from billionaire Frank McCourt and YouTube blogger MrBeast.