

The main highlight will be iOS 19, which is set to receive the biggest redesign since iOS 7 in 2013. The company plans to unify the interfaces of its systems, making them closer to visionOS.

Another major addition will be the iPhone 17 lineup. Apple is expected to introduce the ultra-thin iPhone 17 Air, replacing the Plus version, along with a revamped design for the iPhone 17 Pro. The top-tier model might even get a new name—iPhone 17 Ultra.

In addition to smartphones, the company will announce AirPods Pro 3 with improved noise cancellation, Apple Watch Ultra 3, new MacBook Pros featuring the M5 chip, and an updated Apple TV 4K.

Other possible launches include a new Mac Pro, HomePod mini 2, and Apple Watch SE 3.

With such a variety of major releases, this fall promises to be Apple's busiest season in years.