

The World's First Remote-Controlled Humanoid Robot Fight Took Place in China

China has hosted the world's first battle of remotely controlled humanoid robots. The Unitree G1 robots participated in the event, operated through controllers and voice commands.

The fight consisted of three rounds, each lasting two minutes. The robots faced off in a specially designed arena, showcasing technological advancements in robotics. This event opens up new possibilities for testing robot control and simulating human physical abilities.