

A $151 Million Meat Processing Complex to Be Built in Northern Kazakhstan

A new meat processing complex is planned for construction in Kazakhstan's Akmola region. The large-scale project is set to be financed by the Portuguese company Agrocephalus LDA. According to Kazakhstan's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the total cost of the project is €132 million ($151 million), and it will be implemented in partnership with Kazakhstan's BigFarm company and with the involvement of Spanish firms.

The new meat processing complex aims to enhance Kazakhstan's food industry and expand export opportunities. The facility will be equipped with modern technology to ensure high quality standards and efficient production processes.

While the exact timeline for the project's completion has not been announced, it is expected to create new jobs in the region and strengthen the local economy.
