

The four -legged Spot robots from Boston Dynamics surprised the audience on the American's Got Talent show. This time, five robots performed a dance number for the song Marky Mark "Good Vibrations", including three somersaults ago.

In the show, participants compete in singing, dancing, magic and other performances. The first selection of the teams show live numbers, and the audience vote for access to the semifinals.

Earlier in June, Spot spoke with choreography under the song Queen "Donat Stop Me Now", and the jury unanimously approved the number. This time, robots demonstrated synchronous interaction with each other. The culmination was the "triple" Salto of one of the Spot. The representative of Boston Dynamics noted that it was very difficult to realize this.

According to the results of the spectators, Spot did not go to the semifinals, but the performance impressed the audience.
