

Google taught AI Gemini to generate illustrated fairy tales at night according to the description

Google added a Storybook function to Gemini, with which you can create illustrated fairy tales at night according to a short description.

It is enough to write what the story should be about, and the service generates a 10-page book with illustrations and short paragraphs of the text, which he himself will voiced.

The user can indicate the desired artistic style - for example, in the spirit of anime, comics or plasticine animation. In addition, it is possible to load your own images - for example, a children's drawing - and ask Gemini to create a fairy tale based on it.

Sometimes AI gives strange results. So, one of the stories about the Soma in the aquarium was accompanied by an illustration where the human hand suddenly appeared in the fish.

Nevertheless, the function works more or less stable and is already available around the world on desktops and mobile devices, in all languages supported by Gemini.
