

In Russia, the record is extended in the register of domestic industrial products

The Russian government has amended the register of industrial products of Russian production, increasing the validity of the confirming records from 3 to 5 years. The corresponding decision was signed by the head of government Mikhail Mishustin.

This measure is aimed at optimizing administrative procedures and reducing the financial costs of companies related to an examination of the level of localization of products. An increase in the validity of the register records also helps to reduce the administrative burden on domestic manufacturers.

According to the press service of the government, manufacturers will be able to participate in public procurement without the need to regularly update the documentation that is necessary to participate in the auction. This decision also provides manufacturers with the opportunity to apply for state support, the validity of which exceeds 3 years.
