

Around the series of smartphones Huawei Mate 80 is more and more conversations, but the release date is still a riddle. Some sources assure that the novelty will be shown at the end of October, others – that in November.

Earlier, the Fixedfocus insider said that the company accelerated production, and in a successful situation, the presentation may take place earlier. However, now the same source hints that smartphones can be released in November, like last year's Mate 70 series.

For reference: Mate 70 was presented in November, and Mate 60 in September. The delay was then associated with serious improvements in the hardware and software. Huawei seems to prepare a number of innovations again.

Among the expected functions are a built-in cooling fan, a new Kirin processor with 5G support, an improved camera with a zoom, a flat screen, an increased battery and other improvements.

Some leaks believe that after the late exit of the Pura 80 model, it is hardly worth waiting for the Mate 80 earlier than December.

While the company has not given official comments, it remains only to wait.
