

The company recently began to respond to the attacks of many users on the stock of stock photos of its last Phone 3 model. Nothing was in the center of the scandal in connection with the use of stock images instead of original photos of Nothing Phone 3.

The co-founder of the company Akis Evangelidis explained that this happened due to a delay in replacing content fillers that are used in advertising and materials and announcements used at the time of testing the product before the start of mass production. And after these same-fillers should be replaced by product renders.

Evangelidis emphasized that the company is taking measures to improve the situation and is already engaged in replacing "fictitious" demonstration materials. At the same time, he never gave a clear answer why the company decided to use stock photos instead of obsolete, but real pictures of the product.
