

Since August 25, in Europe, you can again buy Sony Xperia 1 VII after a temporary pause in sales caused by problems with some devices.

Sony found a defect in the board, due to which smartphones could suddenly turn off, restart or not turn on.

To solve the situation, Sony launched a free replacement program and provided IMEI check for users whose phones were damaged. In addition, the company corrected the production process so that the new devices did not have this problem.

Xperia 1 VII is a flagship smartphone worth about € 1.399 with a 6.5 -inch 4K OLED screen with a frequency of 120 Hz, a Snapdragon 8 Elite processor, 12 GB of RAM, up to 512 GB of internal memory and a 5,000 mAC battery with a quick charge of 45 watts.

The phone is equipped with a triple camera of 48 MP, support for a memory card and accents on audio, including the presence of a 3.5 mm connector and Walkman technology.

Sony predicts that by early September, reserves in key countries, such as Great Britain, Germany and France, will return to normal level.
