

The President instructed the Central Bank to report on the transition to the widespread use of the digital ruble

Russian President Vladimir Putin instructed the Central Bank and the government until October 15 to submit a report on the measures taken to transition to the active and widespread use of the digital ruble, including the integration of the asset into the budget.

This list of presidential instructions was developed following the results of the XXVIII St. Petersburg International Economic Forum (PMEF), which took place from June 18 to 21, 2025. Information about this is published on the Kremlin website.

According to the instructions, the Central Bank and the government should ensure the transition to the active use of the digital ruble in various segments of the economy, including interaction with individuals and legal entities. In this case, it is necessary to determine the specific terms for the implementation of each stage of the declared process.
