

Cupertino, USA - Apple has officially unveiled a new accessory for iPhone users: the Crossbody Strap, designed to carry the phone over the shoulder. The strap features a magnetic attachment system that allows quick access to the device while keeping it securely in place.

The strap is priced at $59. However, to use it, customers must also purchase a compatible Apple case, which costs an additional $59. This brings the total cost of the full setup to $118.

The Crossbody Strap is intended to offer convenience and mobility, especially for users on the go. It cannot be attached directly to the iPhone without the special case, making the case an essential part of the accessory system.