

The financial director of the XAI Ilona Mask left the company after three months

The XII company, owned by Ilon Mask, has been working without a financial director for more than a month. According to The Wall Street Journal, Mike Liberator left the company back in July. The reasons for his departure are not disclosed, the replacement has not yet been found. The company itself does not comment on the situation.

Liberator joined the XAI in April and worked for only three months. XII, however, continues to actively develop its technologies, despite personnel changes and large -scale expenses. The new leadership of the financial department, if it appears, will be responsible for monitoring investments and supporting further work of the AI projects. This is especially important, against the backdrop of the Return of AI GROK to the work of government services.
