

Just a few days ago, on the first day of September, summer yielded its warmth to the golden embrace of autumn, bringing with it one of the most cherished national celebrations—the Day of Knowledge and Student Youth. Across our country, the air was filled with anticipation as children, teachers, and parents prepared to welcome the new academic year with joy, pride, and a sense of renewal.

On that special day, the first school bell once again resounded, calling thousands of students into classrooms and opening before them the vast and bright road of knowledge. The atmosphere was filled with flowers, smiles, and the excitement of discovery as first-graders stepped into school life for the very first time.

The Day of Knowledge is not merely the beginning of the school year. It is a nationwide celebration of youth and of the noble calling of teachers.

Ajap REJEPOVA
Instructor, Department of Journalism
International University for the Humanities and Development