

Foxconn, a key supplier to Nvidia, announced on Friday that it is partnering with OpenAI to jointly develop multiple next generations of AI data center racks to be produced in the United States.

According to company representatives, the collaboration aims to build innovative infrastructure capable of meeting the rapidly growing demand for computing power required by artificial intelligence technologies.