

The film world is mourning the loss of one of its most beloved actresses. Catherine O'Hara, globally recognized for her iconic role as Kevin McCallister's mother in the legendary "Home Alone" franchise, has passed away at the age of 71.

According to an official statement from her representative, O'Hara died peacefully at her home in Los Angeles following a brief illness. She would have celebrated her 72nd birthday this coming March.

Catherine O'Hara's career spanned decades, leaving an indelible mark on cinematic history:

1988: She rose to international prominence in Tim Burton's cult classic Beetlejuice.

The 1990s: The massive success of "Home Alone" and "Home Alone 2: Lost in New York" turned her into the world's most famous "movie mom."

The 2010s: She captured the hearts of a new generation as Moira Rose in the hit comedy series "Schitt's Creek", a performance that earned her a prestigious Emmy Award.

The news of her passing has sent shockwaves through Hollywood. Macaulay Culkin, who played her son in "Home Alone", shared a heartbreakin tribute on social media: "Mom, I thought we had more time... I love you, see you on the other side".

Even in her final year, O'Hara remained active in the industry. Last year, she filmed scenes for the upcoming seasons of the acclaimed series "The Last of Us" and "The Studio".

Catherine O'Hara will forever be remembered for her extraordinary talent, her signature wit, and the timeless characters that brought joy to millions of families worldwide.
